Fire lines at the Cow Camp Fire have held strong and withstood intense winds both Saturday night and Sunday. Mop up operations are in full swing and personnel numbers have been decreased.

"Due to the hard work of the firefighters, our operational objectives have been met, lines have held and we are now sharing resources with other incidents in the area," said Deputy Incident Commander Jay Esperance. "On behalf of Rocky Mountain Incident Management Team C, we would like to issue a sincere Thank You to everyone involved in the Cow Camp Fire."

Firefighters will continue mop-up work along the fire edge looking for hot spots and fortifying fire line along the perimeter.

The local unit has contacted specialists with the Burned Area Emergency Response (BAER) Team, which will begin assessing post fire conditions so that they can recommend and implement treatment to protect natural and cultural resources.

Members of the public that may be in the area are reminded that road closures are in place to the north, south and east of the fire area. Those closures and barricades are in place for both the safety of the public as well as the firefighters. Fire management asks that the public respect the barricades in all situations.

The fire can be followed on InciWeb.org or on Twitter, @MBRNFsTBNG, hashtag #CowCampFire.
